the country. The fact that the majority of the population is rural and engaged in agriculture, and that the country's economy is dependent on agriculture, is a major challenge for the government.

The government has implemented a number of policies to support agriculture and rural development. These include the provision of agricultural credit, the establishment of agricultural extension services, and the implementation of rural extension programs. The government has also implemented a number of policies to support the development of the rural sector, including the provision of infrastructure services, the establishment of rural extension services, and the implementation of rural extension programs.
